Report of the Commission on the Administration of the Federal Government

The Commission on the Administration of the Federal Government was organized by Executive Order of the President in 1947. Its purpose was to study the organization and management of the Federal Government and to recommend changes to improve its efficiency. The Commission was composed of members from various departments and agencies, as well as independent experts. It held numerous public hearings and received many suggestions from the public. Its report, published in 1955, contained a wealth of information and recommendations that have been influential in shaping the Federal Government's structure and operations.

Liberalism is a political philosophy that advocates freedom of thought, expression, and action. It is based on the principles of individualism, democracy, and the rule of law. The liberal tradition has its roots in the Enlightenment, which emphasized the importance of reason and individual rights. In the 19th century, liberalism became a dominant force in Western society, leading to the development of modern democratic institutions and the expansion of civil liberties. However, liberalism has also been criticized for its perceived weakness in the face of authoritarianism and social inequality. The liberal tradition continues to evolve, with new challenges and opportunities arising in the 21st century.
